*"Subtle feeling,
delicate emotions,
affection, expressions,
and feelings."*

This article analyzes one of the most delicate and captivating works of Aleksandr Faynberg, the poem entitled "Uchrashuv" ("The Meeting"). This poem occupies a special place in the poet's creative heritage and stands out among his other works due to its deep meaning and subtle artistic expression. Clear evidence of this can be found through the present article.

Aleksandr Faynberg's poem "Uchrashuv" explores the spiritual impact of unexpected and fateful encounters in human life. The inner experiences of the lyrical hero, memories of the past, and emotions of the present moment are expressed in a sincere and emotionally powerful manner. The poet interprets the meeting not as an ordinary event, but as a significant occurrence capable of shaking the human soul and bringing meaningful change to one's life.

In the poem, feelings of longing, suffering, and hope intertwine, revealing the transience of life and the value of human relationships in a deep philosophical sense. In addition, the article examines the poem's artistic and figurative devices in detail. A reader who delves into this article can clearly sense how the poem captivates the human soul and draws one into a world of reflection and contemplation.

Wine as a symbolic device: it does not eliminate sorrow; it only washes it away temporarily. The poet notes that a person can forget their grief, all their pain and problems only while intoxicated, and that this is merely a temporary illusion.

Folding its wings gently,

Grief seems to be retreating, yet it does not disappear completely; this image conveys that grief is alive and capable of returning.

Love and trust together

Here, love and trust are personified. They are abstract notions given human form.

They sit beside us quietly.

Love and trust are close, yet passive; they remain in silence. Through our love and trust we can find a place in people's hearts, and when these two feelings are always with us, a person's capacity for kindness is affirmed.

With trust and with love

Although the characters are together with these feelings, it is implied that they are not enough.

We cannot speak openly.

The most important inner tragedy of the poem: the absence of sincere communication.

We have everything between us,

Outwardly, life seems perfect: there are opportunities, feelings, closeness.

Only hope is missing, that's all.

The most painful and philosophical conclusion of the poem. The absence of hope renders everything that exists meaningless.

Conclusion

Aleksandr Faynberg's poem "Meeting" is one of the works that most powerfully expresses the subtlest, deepest, and most complex feelings of the human soul through artistic means. Although the poet seems to depict a simple scene of a meeting, in reality he profoundly explores, in a philosophical sense, the problems of longing, regret, the transience of time, and belated emotions in human life. A meeting is not merely two people seeing each other in one place; it is also the surfacing of memories of the past, the anguish within the heart, and words left unspoken.

Throughout the poem, the lyrical hero attempts to conceal his inner experiences, yet the feelings in his heart reveal him. The poet skillfully exposes the contrast between a person's outward calm and inner turmoil. During the meeting, unspoken words and unexpressed confessions are felt even more strongly through silence, glances, and minor details. This lends the poem a deep psychological dimension.

In this work, Aleksandr Faynberg also vividly demonstrates how the factor of time affects human life. Years pass, people change, yet the feelings that remain in the heart do not lose their power. Sometimes a belated meeting does not bring joy; on the contrary, it intensifies regret and anguish. The poet conveys this state with sincerity and realism.

The artistic value of the poem lies in the absence of unnecessary words, while each line carries profound meaning. As the reader engages with the poem, they recall similar meetings from their own lives, lost opportunities, and words left unsaid. This is what makes the poem resonate with every human heart.

In conclusion, the poem “Meeting” reveals how complex and unstable human emotions are and shows human helplessness before time and fate. Through this work, Aleksandr Faynberg invites the reader to reflect on their own feelings and to turn the pages of their past life once again. The poem holds great significance not only as a literary work, but also as a life lesson.
